Plant Manager:

“As a business team we are much better informed with the data we get from the system now. Specifically, last year we were looking at a make versus buy analysis, with outsourcing some product to India, and actually with the data we were able to get, and the availability numbers we were able to get, we've actually brought work back in-house, as opposed to outsource that on certain machines. And that's been a really positive thing with the workforce and the engagement of the people.”

“Capital justification is a much less heated discussion at the business team these days, with the availability portion of the information that we get from the data. We can then understand, in terms of sales, volume, efficiency, how quickly we could implement change on existing capital - do we require to make investment at an earlier stage to make sure we can meet our customer demand? And that's a really important and useful information we didn't have previously.”
